A. Indigenous Histories of the U.S. and Canada

Doug Kiel, Assistant Professor, History

Tuesdays, 9:30-11:30 a.m., Norris University Center

This course will reframe the United States and Canada by highlighting the often-neglected histories of the Native Americans who have called the North American continent home for thousands of years. This course will begin by examining Indigenous North America before the arrival of European empires and their competing visions for the North American continent. The course will then shift toward the law to offer a nuanced understanding of the legal mechanisms of U.S. and Canadian colonialism, before shifting to the U.S. occupation of Hawaii and Alaska. In the course's final two lectures, we will discuss romanticized depictions of Native people through the medium of film, as well as the processes of Native American nation building following the devastating policies of the nineteenth century. Throughout the course, we will emphasize colonialism as an ongoing phenomenon and acknowledge the important role of Indigenous people in shaping – and resisting – what we now know as the United States and Canada.

Jun. 26 Native North America Before and After Columbus

We will examine the Indigenous world of 1491, before the arrival of Europeans, including highlighting the Indigenous history of the Chicago area. This lecture will also discuss the new worlds created by a complex web of global exchange following European arrival.

Jul. 3 Indigenous Encounters with European Empires

This lecture will range widely, highlighting each of the European empires that laid claim to the present-day U.S. and Canada and Native peoples' shifting relationships with those empires. We will emphasize the important ways in which Indigenous people exercised considerable power to determine the future continent.

Jul. 10 The Foundations of Native Law and Policy

This lecture will highlight the legal ideologies that underpinned U.S. and Canadian expansion into Indigenous territory. We will examine key court decisions and policy experiments.

Jul. 17 Occupying Hawaii and Alaska

This lecture will primarily focus on U.S. expansion into Hawaii and Alaska beginning in the 19th century, but will also highlight the growth of the U.S. empire abroad, including Samoa and Guam.

Jul. 24 Native Americans in Popular Culture and Film

Non-Native people in the U.S. and Canada – and indeed around the world – have long romanticized Native peoples through the medium of film. In this lecture, we will view early ethnographic films, and discuss the legacies of Hollywood’s depiction of Native peoples. This lecture will also highlight the important work of contemporary Indigenous filmmakers.

Jul. 31 20th Century Indigenous Nation Rebuilding and Settler Backlash

The final lecture will highlight an ongoing tradition of Indigenous protest and resistance through intellectual works and inter-tribal organizations. We will also examine tribal governance during the second half of the 20th century and Native American successes in improving socioeconomic conditions within their communities. Lastly, this lecture will identify the challenges to contemporary tribal rebuilding efforts, including land buy-back initiatives.

Doug Kiel (Ph.D., University of Wisconsin – Madison, 2012) is a citizen of the Oneida Nation and studies Native American history, with particular interests in the Great Lakes region and twentieth century Indigenous nation rebuilding. He is working on a book manuscript entitled Unsettling Territory: Oneida Indian Resurgence and Anti-Sovereignty Backlash.*

Prior to joining the Northwestern faculty, he taught at Williams College, Columbia University, the University of Pennsylvania, and Middlebury College. He is the recipient of grants and fellowships from the Ford Foundation, the Lyndon Baines Johnson Foundation, the American Historical Association, the American Philosophical Society, and the School for Advanced Research (SAR) in Santa Fe, NM, among others. In addition to his research and teaching, he has worked with several museums and served as Indigenous Fellow at the United Nations Office of the High Commission for Human Rights (OHCHR) in Geneva, Switzerland.

B. Honest to God: Eternal Questions about the Existence of God

Kenneth Seeskin, Professor, Philosophy

Tuesdays, 12:45-2:45 p.m., Norris University Center

We will be using three books, all readily available in paperback.

- Søren Kierkegaard, Fear and Trembling, translated by Alastair Hannay, Penguin, pp. 49-108.
- David Hume, Dialogues Concerning Natural Religion, Hackett.
- Immanuel Kant, Religion Within the Limits of Reason Alone, translated by Greene and Hudson, Harper Torch Books, pp. 15-72; 142-151; 158-173.

Readings from Anselm, Aquinas, and Rosenzweig will be provided in a handout.

Jun. 26 Why Was Abraham Willing to Sacrifice Isaac?

This class will examine Abraham's near sacrifice of Isaac in light of Kierkegaard's interpretation of it in Fear and Trembling. Why is Abraham viewed as the father of faith if he was willing to commit a moral outrage? Does God have the power to turn a sacrificial murder into a holy act? Can God temporarily suspend morality for a higher purpose? What would it mean to have an absolute relation to such a God? Can we praise Abraham at the same time that we condemn religious terrorists?

Readings: Genesis 22 and selections from Fear and Trembling

Jul. 3 Does God Exist?

The class will examine the age-old question: Does God exist? What sort of reasons can be given for it and what sort against it? What do arguments for the existence of God actually show? How persuasive are they? What do we even mean by the word "God"?

Readings: Selections from Anselm's Proslogion and Aquinas' Summa Theologica

Jul. 10 Skepticism about God

This class will take a skeptical approach to the existence of God. Can we really prove the existence of something for which there is no empirical evidence? Even if we could, wouldn't we wind up with a strange conception of God? Do people really look to arguments in deciding whether to believe in God or are other largely emotional factors involved?

Readings: Selections from Hume's Dialogues on Natural Religion

Jul. 17 God, Evil, and Morality

This class will serve as a transition from Hume to Kant. If God is all-powerful, all-knowing, and all-good, why is there evil in the world? Does belief in God really lead to moral behavior? Once again: Can God suspend morality for a higher purpose or is it rather the case that morality is the highest purpose one can possibly achieve? What would a purely moral conception of God be like?

Readings: Selections from Hume's Dialogues on Natural Religion and Kant's Religion within the Limits of Reason Alone

Jul. 24 Does Religion Make Us Moral?

This class will examine whether a purely moral conception of God is a prerequisite for moral behavior in us. Is it rational to expect God to forgive evil? Why do we need houses of worship to believe in God? What dangers do houses of worship create? What is the difference between faith and fanaticism?

Readings: Selections from Kant's Religion within the Bounds of Reason Alone

Jul. 31 Kierkegaard, Kant, and Love of God

This class will examine whether it is possible to strike a middle ground between the approaches of Kierkegaard and Kant. Why does God command love? Can love even be commanded? What does it mean to love God? What effect does love of God have on our relation to other people?

Readings: Selections from Rosenzweig's The Star of Redemption
